“Call Rome 060606”: one number, one city

The new telephone service which gives access to information and services provided by the Rome Municipal Government enters into experimental stage

Rome, June 17th , 2002 – “Call Rome 060606” the experimental project which enables citizens to have ready access to information and services provided by the Rome Municipal Government only by dialing a single phone number, has been presented today to the press, the citizens’ and consumers’ groups, and trade unions .

The anchor of the event was Piero Marrazzo. Walter Veltroni, Mayor of Rome, Mariella Gramaglia Commissioner for Streamlining, Giuseppe Battaglia, Chairman of the City _Commission on Communication and, in their capacity of technological partners, attended the meeting, as technological partners , Massimo Sarmi, Managing Director of Poste Italiane (the Italian Postal Service) and Massimo Bareato, Managing Director of T-Systems Italy.

“Call Rome 060606” is a service created in order to facilitate and hasten contacts between citizens and the municipal administration. The At the cost of a local phone call, the service operates on two levels. First level: users can receive general information on services provided by the municipal administration and business hours, and, if needed, they can be directly connected to the various offices of the administration. Second level: users who have specific questions can get more detailed, specific answers.

The service is available 24 hours a day all year round and operates like an “integrated contact center” using cutting edge technology. Users are served by a team of up to 70 operators, in the peak hours, who are continuously trained on communication systems, the organization of the municipal administration and main internal procedures.

The partners in this project are, in which 3 million euro, Poste Italiane (the Italian Postal Service) and T-Systems Italia (Deutsche Telekom Group). They formed a temporary Association of Enterprise and participated in a European tender, winning the contract. They will manage the service for two years.

“Call Rome 060606 entered into experimental stage on June 18th 2002. It will be gradually fine -tuned – said Mariella Gramaglia, Rome City Council Commissioner for Streamling – also based on suggestions and indications of citizens and users' groups. Such feedback will be extremely valuable to make the system increasingly respondent to the current citizens' needs. "The service should become fully operational – continued Mariella Gramaglia – in October 2002. It is planned to progressively evolve, through integration with other media, such as the internet, into a "one-stop portal, the gateway to the complex organization of the municipal administration. .

"With the experience and the results Poste Italiane have achieved in the last two years with its unique Call Center" – says Paolo Baldelli, Director of the Central Processes and Technologies Division of Poste Italiane - "our Company is ready to offer, in partnership, its services with respect to the strategies, organization, processes and technology to the Public Administration".

The heart of Call Rome 060606 service is a software application integrated with TLC systems developed by T-Systems Italia (Deutsche Telekom Group), which enables to create an interface between the existing voice data systems and the routing system using a single phone number, based on the latest technology available today available. "this is our response – said Massimo Bareato, Managing Director, T-Systems Italia – "through a qualified selection of solutions and services long successfully applied in the industrial sector, to the latest challenge of modernization and increased efficiency within the Public Administration, also through the search of new forms of services for the citizens.
